

MUSICAL CICADAS.

A Swarm of Them Appears This Season in the North.

TWENTY-TWO KNOWN BROODS.

They Are Good to Eat, Says the Bug Bureau. Most Painful in the Fall. Not Real Locusts—Why They Are Flying Away—How They and Other Insects Sing.

By means of it the female makes a longish hole, which she enlarges until it is big enough to hold from ten to twenty eggs. These she lays in the fissure side by side until it is filled, placing them in pairs. Then she goes to work to build another nest, continuing until perhaps she has constructed a score of such nests along the twig. By the time her supply of 400 or 500 eggs is exhausted she is so weak that presently she falls down and dies.

THE YOUNG CICADAS.

The eggs are one-sixteenth of an inch long. They are so delicate that the forms of the unhatched insects can be seen through the shells. At the end of a period, variously stated at from fourteen to fifty-two days, the young cicadas come out. They are yellowish white, with six legs, the first pair resembling lobster claws. Under the first pair is a pair of sucking tubes. They are very lively, the first thing they do when they come out is to reach the ground, and then they accomplish in a very extraordinary manner, by the use of their sucking tubes, the purpose of their dropping off. The instinct which impels them to this feat is so strong that they will jump from the height of which they can have formed no conception to the ground, and then they will carry the sucking tubes to the water, as soon as it is reached. Having reached the earth, they immediately begin to dig, and their strong fore legs, which they use to follow the roots of plants and are subsequently found attached to those which are eaten as cicadas. People in many parts of the world have tried them in plain stew, in thick milk and butter. The insects were collected from trees as they emerged from the chrysalis. After being cooked for breakfast. It was found that they were good to eat.

THE CICADAS ARE NOT LOCUSTS.

The cicadas are not "locusts" at all, in fact, but cicadas. They are good to eat, according to the testimony of the division of entomology. Experts attached to that bureau experiment with them every year. One brood has been under observation since 1715, and it is possible to make with absolute certainty a prediction as to the "locusts" will appear at a given place in the 30th A.D.
